Interview Write Up

I interviewed my sister, Martina Granzella, because she is in college to become a nurse. I did this because I wanted to get views from a person working to get into being a nurse, and details about college and training. I then want to do my second interview on an actual nurse so I could get details on working conditions and things like that.

From this interview I learned a lot about college and everything that has to do with the training to become a nurse. Martina told me that to become a nurse you have to take a lot of science pre-requisites and normal gen-eds, and now that she finished those she is taking a lot of nursing classes and a lot of clinicals. When I asked her if it was hard she said, "Yes, it's hard, but it is also really rewarding. You just have to keep reminding yourself of the rewards and you have a really good support system from other nursing students." I like to do stuff that is really rewarding, not things you get a reward for. Many times during the interview Martina talked about how rewarding the training and being a nurse is. I love to help people and I know I would find it really enjoyable to help these people who really need it and really appreciate it. As hard as it might be I like a challenge and I know it would be worth it.

I asked Martina why she chose nursing and if there was anything about her personality that made her become a nurse, and she said she liked taking care of people, and she likes being kind to people. This definitely fits my personality as well, because I have noticed that it is really easy for me to care about someone.

All in all, I learned a lot from Martina about college. This interview made me want to be a nurse even more. I'm glad I chose her to interview because it really helped answer some questions I had about becoming a nurse.
